During our December holidays, we visited our uncle Mr. Tugume. He is the O.C of Jinja Road Police Station. He stays in the Barracks just next to the police station. His main work as a police officer is to enforce law and order in his area of command. He has to make sure that there is peace and security.

Every morning, uncle conducts a parade. During the parade, he deploys officers to guard important people and buildings. Some of the buildings include; the parliament, banks, hospitals, hotels and other public places. Some officers are stationed in one place and others move to different places looking for wrong doers.

Most police officers carry guns with them while on duty. Others carry handcuffs and short heavy sticks called batons. This is done to make sure that they have means of controlling crime rate.

When officers arrest a wrong doer, they put handcuffs around his wrists. This prevents him from running away. Once arrested, the suspect is taken to the police station to make a statement. This will be given as a reference in court. Later the suspect is put in a police cell for custody. A wrong doer is usually called a suspect until courts of law prove him guilty or not guilty of the crime.

After preparing the suspect's file, he is produced in court for trial. During the trial, the suspect is given chance to defend himself. The suspect is free to get a lawyer to defend him. In most cases, judges or magistrates require witnesses to give evidence. The witnesses are required to tell the court what they know about the case. After listening to both sides, the judge passes the judgment.
