A birthday party is an annual event. It is held to celebrate the day one was born. Unlike funerals where people mourn their departed dear ones, birthday parties are celebrations of joy. They are celebrated by both adults and children. However, these celebrations are common among children.

Last Saturday, Akumu's class celebrated her birthday. The class had been informed a day earlier. A notice about the party had been displayed for the class by Mr. Lukyamuzi, the class teacher.

"Hello children," Mr. Lukyamuzi said, "as displayed on the class notice board, tomorrow will be Akumu's birthday and we are all invited to join her in celebration."

This invitation excited Akumu's classmates. They talked about a lot of things that they expected and imagined. All children anxiously looked forward to enjoying the party. By 8:00 o'clock the following morning, all the children had arrived at school. Surprisingly, Benanta, a habitual late comer had also kept time.

Soon, all the pupils converged in the school main hall followed by their teachers shortly after.

Introducing himself as the day's master of ceremonies, Mr. Jon Barasa asked Mark Kigozi, the shortest boy in the class, to lead the gathering in a word of prayer that would bless the celebration.

On the table laid before the gathering was a large pink and white cake. Every pupil was excited by the icing on the cake and how tasty it looked. The pupils enjoyed beverages of different flavours. There was a lot of music and dancing as the party lasted for about three hours. This was fun indeed for everybody in attendance.

During his speech towards the end of the party, the class teacher first congratulated Akumu on making thirteen years of age.

"I am proud of Akumu. Akumu is a true symbol of discipline and humility," said Mr. Lukyamuzi.

He then advised the children to emulate her discipline, warning that whoever misbehaved would not be allowed to be part of any future class celebrations.
