Before Mr. Ojulu, our current teacher of English, joined our school, I thought I knew English very well. I was proud thinking that I was very good at both spoken and written English. I also thought I was the best in not only the whole school but also the entire district.

Mr. Ojulu does not speak English with any account of a local language in Uganda. The first time he entered our classroom, we loved his way of pronouncing English words. He pronounced them excellently and pleasantly. We could ask him to repeat the word pretending that we had missed it. We came to like Mr. Ojulu so much because we were surely learning a lot. Besides his pronunciation of the words, he also taught us meanings of words and a great deal of abbreviations. To be perfect in using English, Mr. Ojulu advised us to own dictionaries.

"A dictionary is a very useful book," Mr. Ojulu told us. "This is because it helps us to learn many new words and to understand their meaning. We also learn to spell and pronounce the words correctly. These are just a few of the uses of a dictionary"

Indeed by primary six, each pupil had acquired a dictionary and our spoken and written English had greatly improved.
