This second part of the year (July to December) is usually filled with wedding parties. On every wedding budget made, the component of security is reflected. Unfortunately, security is left to ushering in guests and manning parking yards and this item is put at the end of the budget.
Times are changing pretty fast making all of us vulnerable to attacks by all sorts of criminals, including terrorists.

When planning a wedding, give the security sector a great treat. Get to know the area police and involve them in planning. Let them appreciate the venue, allow them to provide technical and strategic guidance that wards off potential criminals. Be clear on what you want beyond securing the parking yard as argued above. In case of a crime occurring, let the law take its course.

On a very serious note, never allow guards to touch alcohol because they might turn out to be a disaster. Guns and liquor don't mix. Security is paramount. Avoid the fears and tears that could follow the actions of a drunk guard. A successful wedding starts and ends with security and safety.
